

Greetings from Princeton,

Tomorrow the Westminster Concert Bell Choir departs on its annual concert tour - traveling to the South this year.

If you live near one of the concert venues, we hope you'll be able to attend a performance. If you can't make it to a performance, but know someone who does live nearby, please pass the information along to anyone who might be interested.

The Bell Choir just released a new CD, which should be available through our online store at <http://www.westminsterchoircollege.org> later next week.

For those of you who were able to join us for Reunions, we hope you had a safe journey home. For the alumni who couldn't make it to Princeton, we hope you'll be able to join us next year.

Anthony Tommasini, chief classical music critic for The New York Times, presented an inspiring Commencement address. He praised Westminster's graduates for their contributions to the "great tradition of choir" and said that they can have a significant effect on the world of music and society as a whole.

"Only by offering everyone a direct involvement with music will we develop not only future artists but also an audience," he said. He emphasized that, although many of Westminster's graduates will have the opportunity to work with distinguished musicians, he said that it is just as important to work with "earnest amateurs."

Watch your mail in the next months for more stories about the 2006 Reunions and coming events.
